

A LETTER TO THE NEXT ASSISTANTSHIP

To the Next Communications Assistantship,

You're in for a really great experience. Genuinely. There are so many opportunities to do real, meaningful work and actually own it, and getting to the Orange Bowl will make it all worth it in a way that's hard to put into words until you're there.

Some advice: stay on top of your work and keep it organized. I can't stress this enough, especially when you get into the game program. Keep a running weekly task list and actually maintain it. And don't wait around to be told what to do, so if you've finished what's been assigned, go ask Mike or Emily if there's anything else that needs to get done. Being proactive goes a long way.

Don't be too shy either. Everyone across every department is friendly and more than willing to help, so use that. There's no reason to figure things out alone when you have great people around you.

Most importantly, enjoy it. Work hard, but have fun with it. It's a really special thing you get to be a part of.

Good luck this season!
